Charley Whittmore

Damn Good Dawg

By Loran Smith

Charley Whittmore has been a fixture on Georgia’s athletic front for nearly a half century. First he was a player, then came a coaching stint. These were followed by an administrative role in which he was officially a manager but more so a behind-the-scenes troubleshooter who was forever making things run smoothly when an athletic event got underway--an uncommon contributor whose reward was the inner satisfaction that he had done his job the way it was supposed to be done. He drew attention only when something went awry.

As a football player, he had everything but speed. He had a competitor’s heart, a rugged receiver who could make plays--one of the best possession receivers ever to play between the hedges. His reliability factor was over the top. Need a first down, get the ball to Charley. Need a big play to keep a drive moving forward, focus in Charley’s direction. With an ability to get open, Whittmore made countless big plays in his career and set a number of records during his three varsity years in Athens. He also returned kicks, was an accomplished blocker, and was a valuable leader--his teammates saw him produce in the face of pounding defenses, one who never complained and one who gave of himself. They took note.

With winged feet, Whittmore would have claimed high honor, like All-America, and likely would have been a big-time receiver in the NFL where he would have flourished with his extraordinarily competent hands and his ability to find the open field with his cogent route running. There was no flash to his play, just clutch and yeoman performance every snap, every game. After a brief stay in training camp with the New Orleans Saints, Whittmore embarked on a coaching career, starting out with Memphis State, moving on to Vanderbilt with Fred Pancoast, who was Georgia’s offensive coordinator during Whittmore’s senior year, 1970. In 1978, when Pat Hodgson left Georgia as receivers coach to join Rex Dockery at Texas Tech, Vince Dooley hired Whittmore to replace Hodgson. He would have a run of 37 years before stepping aside “for the next generation.” By 1990, Dooley had retired to the athletic director’s chair. His successor wanted to revamp his staff. Dooley welcomed Whittmore to his administrative lineup. Nonetheless, Whittmore still had the motivation to coach. As time elapsed, Whittmore saw that, at his age, the profession often leads to a dead-end street. He took the security of management and administration with Georgia and has made a laudable contribution without headlines.

The son of a Methodist minister, Whittmore settled in with a multiplicity of assignments--from facility management to game day operations for all sports to routine maintenance to trouble shooting for anything under the sun and fixing whatever was broken. All the while he was investing into a retirement program that would enable him and his charming wife, Debbie, to enjoy their golden years.

With a bent for enterprise, Whittmore, in 1990, purchased a couple of lawn mowers and started a lawn maintenance business, which flourished. He put his earnings into an interest-bearing account which would underwrite the cost of his children’s college education. There were many days when he would leave the Coliseum, where his office was located, load up his lawn mowers and cut grass until suppertime. Those who are imbued with the work ethic, energy, and inventiveness often enjoy the self-satisfaction of doing something good, bringing about positive results. That was the Charley Whittmore way. When he called it quits last week, all his receiving records had been broken. His life as an administrator did not qualify him for any grand awards, but if ribbons, like that for a military officer, had been attached to his blazer--for loyalty, due diligence, integrity, selflessness, charity, fair play, altruism, and just being a “Damn Good Dawg,”--he might have been crippled from the weight of justifiable tribute.

There won’t be a building named for this good and decent man, but few who follow in his footsteps will ever surpass his legacy. Those of us who appreciate him and his love of alma mater are sad that he is moving on but rejoice in his having come our way.

A native of Brunswick, Georgia, Willie McClendon began his athletic career as a three-sport athlete in football, basketball, and track & field at Brunswick's Glynn Academy. A three-year letterman in football (1972-74) and a two-year letterman in track & field (1973-75), McClendon led his high school football team to a regional title in 1972 and was named Georgia's Most Outstanding track & field athlete in his senior year. Upon graduating, McClendon attended the University of Georgia where, under Coach Vince Dooley, he became a three-year letterman (1976-78) at running back for the Bulldogs football team. Voted team captain in his senior year, McClendon finished that season with a school-record 1,312 rushing yards and 13 touchdowns and was named the 1978 SEC Player of the Year. After accumulating 2,228 yards rushing and 22 touchdowns in three seasons at Georgia, McClendon was selected by the Chicago Bears in the 1979 NFL Draft. In four seasons with the Bears (1979-1982), McClendon accumulated 430 all-purpose yards (rushing, receiving, and punt/kick returns), scored two touchdowns, and made over a dozen tackles on special teams. After finishing his professional football career with the USFL's Jacksonville Bulls in 1984, McClendon turned his attention to coaching and served as the running back coach for Valdosta State University (1986-87) and the University of Georgia (1989-94).

Womack Made Walker Go

by Loran Smith

Jimmy Womack was the man who often made Herschel Walker go--in 1980. If you witnessed this National Championship team in that glory year or if you examine old game film with a sage eye, you conclude that Womack was similarly as valuable to the offensive production as Herschel was himself.

Herschel had thundering hoofs and could make yardage on his own--as much as any back who had ever played the game. However, he was like the rest of the world of great runners. If you stop him before he gets untracked, then you have the best defense for a runner. Give him time to pick his hole, however, and he would not only get his yards, he would punish you physically.

Getting Herschel on the corner was Jimmy Womack's job. He was the master of three of the most important ingredients a blocker can have: attitude, technique and leverage. He could take the legs out from under a defender with the greatest of aplomb. Few to wear the silver britches have ever been better. He was swift and deft, using his body like a scythe which led to his teammates giving him the moniker, "Hatchett Head." In close and tight, he struck with power and drive, bringing about confirmation of positive results on short yardage plays.

Where he was without peer, however, was out on the flank where he was like a heat-seeking missile when he went after his man. He was not imposing at 5-10, 205 pounds, but nobody blocked with more verve and efficiency. Every star has a supporting actor or sidekick. What would the Lone Ranger have been without Tonto, Johnny Carson without Ed McMahon, Batman without Robin. A closer in baseball can't rise to the occasion without a setup man. Nothing like a center to keep a quarterback from becoming uppity.

The good news about the 1980 story is that there was an unselfish attitude on the part of both the star and the unsung hero. Herschel, devoid of arrogance, deflected the outpouring of praise to his teammates. He knew his success, in large part, was something Womack contributed to structurally. It was never a sometime thing. Womack was consistent and gave of himself as much as Herschel. A selfless fullback, Womack understood that if he did his job, Herschel would lead the team to ultimate heights. He wanted to be a part of that. He was blue collar and truly enjoyed his subordinated role. That Herschel appreciated him made him work all the harder.

In the Georgia system, the fullback and the offensive linemen were birds of a feather. Positive results came when they did their job and they gloried in their life under the radar roles. The fullback, in the Power I formation that Georgia ran back then, was a blocker first and foremost. But when he was handed the ball or caught a pass out of the backfield, good things usually happened. As a senior in 1980, Womack had 49 rushing attempts and gained 209 yards rushing.

It was a glorious day when Herschel decided to cast his lot with the Bulldogs on Easter weekend 1980. The offensive coaches knew they had the ideal fullback in place for what they had in mind for Herschel. Womack was a three year letterman and had already demonstrated with Willie McClendon that he was the best at the point of attack. McClendon was big and fast, but Herschel was bigger and faster.

Womack was the ideal fullback just as Herschel was the ideal tailback for the times. Everything was ideal as it turned out for that team as the National Championship season confirms.

"Jimmy could block the linebacker and he could block on the corner as well as any fullback we ever had. He was compact and he could strike a decisive blow against the best of defenders. He was an MVP blocker who made a difference in our championship season," Coach Vince Dooley said.

His teammates always respected Womack which is why so many of them journeyed to Warner Robins on Saturday to say goodbye to an unselfish team player. Jimmy Womack identified with the team's slogan to "be the best that I can be."

End of an era at Georgia with Tereshinski's Resignation

by Loran Smith

There are many times when fathers beget sons who play for their alma mater, but it is rare that you find fathers, sons, and grandsons all playing for the same school. With the retirement of Joe Tereshinski, Jr., this means that for the first time in 40 years, there will not be a Tereshinski affiliated with Georgia football when the Bulldogs kick off the season in 2015.

It all began with the senior Joe Tereshinski, who was recruited to Athens in 1941 by a colorful former lineman, Harold "War Eagle" Ketron, who sent, among others, Charley Trippi to play for the Bulldogs. Joe's eldest son, Joe T., had become a fixture in the Georgia Athletic Association facilities since signing to play for the Bulldogs in 1973. The grandson, Joe III, lettered with the Bulldogs as a quarterback in 2004-06. The last of the Tereshinskis is now a coach at UNC-Charlotte with Brad Lambert, a former Georgia assistant.

All three Tereshinskis spent time coaching, beginning with the original Tereshinski, who coached for the Redskins after his retirement from playing in the National Football League. Each of the Tereshinskis is characterized by passion and rare loyalty to the University of Georgia. Joe Sr. loved his alma mater with the greatest of attachment and was always expressing thanks to Coach Wallace Butts for the scholarship that provided him with an education. He sent both of his boys to Georgia and named his second son Wally, a former Bulldog letterman, in honor of Coach Butts. Joe Jr. was ingrained with the Bulldog spirit and pride from the cradle. Love of UGA was part of his DNA. Nothing changed with the passing of time.

Joe T. became so attached to Athens, he never wanted to leave. He has held a variety of jobs from coaching to video coordinator to strength and conditioning coach. He developed rapport with his players and tried to emulate his strength coach, John Kasay, a fellow Pennsylvanian. He saw Kasay work his men hard, but he was there for them when they had a problem or issue or whenever they needed a friend. Kasay cared for his players and they knew it.

Like Kasay, Joe T. was there when a player needed help — whether it be with tutoring, counseling, or homesickness. None of them ever came his way who did not hear him pontificate on the importance of being a member of the Bulldog Nation. He believed that passion and commitment won games. He experienced it as a player in 1976 when Georgia won the Southeastern Conference, coming from behind to win five games. The Bulldogs clinched the '76 SEC championship at Auburn when quarterback Ray Goff had such a bruised arm from the Florida game that he did not throw a single pass versus the Tigers. Georgia won 28-0.

"The coaches told us we were going to run the ball, and we were up for the challenge, but I don't think any of us thought we would not throw the ball at all," Joe remembers.

There are countless highlights both as a player and as a coach. Rather than single out games, Joe prefers to talk about relationships — those with his teammates during his time as a player and those with the coaching staff and the players he coached. "The bonding and the feelings you get from working together to develop into a team is what means the most. The highlight of my time at Georgia is those relationships," he says.

For years, even into the nineties, Joe T. lifted weights, ran sprints with his players, and could keep up with them. He would always say when he had expended most of his energy after a workout, "Hey guys, I get paid to do this."

Father time has taken its toll. His knees remind him of that. At a strength and conditioning conference last year, which had attracted a group of 400, a speaker asked all those who were 30 years or older to stand up. About 125 took their feet. Then he asked those 35 or younger to be seated. About 80 remained standing. Those 40 and younger were asked to take a seat. About 45 were left standing. When those 45 and younger were told to take a seat, 20 of the 400 were standing. "If," Joe smiled, "he had asked those 50 and younger to take a seat, I might have been the last one standing. I've had a good ride and love being a Bulldog. I have no regrets, but it is time for me to pass the torch."

Like his father, Joe T. leaves a legacy of love and loyalty to alma mater that few can match.

As UGA football lettermen, we take immense pride in the University of Georgia and its traditions. To continue the University's exceptional heritage, the UGA Football Lettermen's Club has started a new tradition among those for who UGA has been more than an alma mater, but a way of life.

Bulldog Haven is a designated section of the historic Oconee Hill Cemetery that is open exclusively to UGA football lettermen, their spouses and families. Located adjacent to Sanford Stadium, Bulldog Haven offers a unique resting place in the heart of the University of Georgia campus. This is Athens' only cemetery designated to honor and celebrate the lives of UGA football lettermen. We invite you to consider supporting Bulldog Haven by deciding now to invest in a plot for yourself and your loved ones.

Bulldog Haven is a non-profit venture that will support the maintenance and restoration of historic Oconee Hill Cemetery. In addition to the noteworthy University of Georgia personalities interred there, Oconee Hill Cemetery is also the resting place of many important figures in Georgia's history.

Private tours of Bulldog Haven are available by calling Sexton Brian Adler at 706.543.6262.
